Title V. Health Care Workforce

Because doctors, nurses, and other health care providers are the backbone of the health care system, the Act supports and expands our Nation's health care workforce.

By funding scholarships and loan repayment programs, the number of primary care physicians, nurses, physician assistants, mental health providers, and dentists will increase in the areas of the country that need them most. With a comprehensive approach focusing on retention and enhanced educational opportunities, the Act combats the critical nursing shortage. And through new incentives and recruitment, the Act increases the supply of public health professionals so that the United States is prepared for health emergencies.

The Act provides state and local governments flexibility and resources to develop health workforce recruitment strategies. And it helps to expand critical and timely access to care by funding the expansion, construction, and operation of community health centers throughout the United States.

Title V. Health Care Workforce

Increasing the Supply of Primary Care Providers in Underserved Communities

The Act will increase the number of primary care providers, including doctors, physician assistants, nurse practitioners, and dentists in the areas of the country that need them most. Through the National Health Service Corps, the Act provides significant funding for scholarships and loan repayment for doctors, nurses and other providers who provide medical, dental, and mental health care in urban and rural areas that have a shortage of health professionals. It also increases the loan repayment amount and enables additional flexibility for providers to meet their service requirements.

It creates a loan repayment program for pediatric, mental and behavioral health specialists who provide services to children and adolescents in underserved areas or with underserved populations.

The Act also supports scholarships and loan repayments for disadvantaged students who commit to work in medically underserved areas and who serve as faculty in participating institutions.

Title V. Health Care Workforce

Increasing the Supply of Nurses

The Act will increase the number of nurses in the Unites States. It takes a comprehensive approach that helps to retain nurses and to address financial barriers that nurses and nurse faculty face today.

The Act awards competitive grants to nursing schools to strengthen nurse education and training programs and to improve nurse retention programs throughout the country.

It increases the student loan amounts for nursing students and addresses critical nurse faculty shortages by making nursing faculty eligible for loan repayment and scholarship programs.

Supporting the Next Generation of Health Professionals

The Act increases the pipeline of health professionals by supporting the development and implementation of health sciences programs in public secondary schools so that students can prepare for careers in health professions.

It supports education and training grants to meet the critical needs of Americans who require mental and behavioral health care.

It increases funding for geriatric education and training.

And it creates scholarships and loan repayment programs for allied health professionals, including radiology technicians and physical therapists.
