

Government Relations

Pennsylvania

Ron Klink is a senior policy advisor at the firm with an expansive and diverse professional background. Ron served four consecutive terms as a representative for the 4th Congressional District of Pennsylvania where he acquired firsthand knowledge of federal legislative procedures and learned the ins and outs of Washington, D.C. Ron ran the D.C. office for former Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Wolf for six years and was the Democratic nominee for the U.S. Senate in 2000. Throughout his time at the firm, Ron has solved problems in the billions of dollars relating to federal and state banking issues, sometimes solving problems in days or weeks instead of years. Among his notable accomplishments, Ron has successfully secured funding to build security measures for Fort Indiantown Gap, worked to bring billions of dollars to the 13 Appalachian states, secured funding for iRobot' military battlefield robots, and aided in a lobbying effort that resulted in Comcast acquiring NBC and Universal Studios in one of the largest media, cable, and entertainment mergers.
